cessful Youths When Results is granted. Are Announced in the Middle of a Lecture

It was when a lecture was being given South America by Selden Martin of the Harvard School of Business Administration at the High School of Commerce this morning that announcement was received from the mayor's office of the successful candidates for the Champer of Commerce trip to South America. Headmaster James E. Downey interrupted the lecture to make the names known. William A. Boltz of Jamaica Plain and Edward Freedman of Roxbury were called out as the winners, standing respectively first and second on the list. and their alternates, Raymond W. Moore of Mattapan and Clarence E. Rosen of Jamaica Plain.

The announcement was received with cheers, even those who did not succeed rejoicing that their school had carried off the honors. The four winners were then hurried into the master's office for a little talk, had their pictures taken in the school yard and were dismissed that they might at once communicate with their parents and make preparations for MINORITY HAS REPORT

BOY IMMIGRANT PLAN FAVORED IN SOUTH AUSTRALIA

ADELAIDE, S. Aus .- Referring to the millions of acres of wheat-growing lands in South Australia which will be served by the railways now in course of construction, the commissioner of crown ands and immigration, the Hon. Fred W. Young, M. P., said at a conference of agriculturists held at Quorn recently that it was sometimes remarked that the adult agricultural laborer was not a satisfactory person to bring from England, because the conditions in Australia RUSSIA IN OPPOSITION for Stanhope. The next congress of the more keenly, that apart from this exwere so widely different from those in the old country, and often he had a great deal to unlearn as well as learn.

The idea of the government was to introduce individuals at ages when they could readily adapt themselves. There were in England many lads ranging from 15 to 17 years anxious to come to Australia. Out of the hundreds of thousands available surely there could be selected a percentage of really splendid fellows. If that could be done under a proper system it was believed that after they had spent a few years on the farms they would be absorbed into the country life and be a decided acquisition to it.

The proposal was that, provided suitable homes could be guaranteed, as well as fair treatment, say, 50 boys should be brought out as a beginning; they should be under the control of the state until they were 21, and should be apprenticed to selected farmers for three years. They would be paid fair wages, allowing for their usefulness and inexperience, and the farmers would be asked not only to pay those wages but make their surroundings as homelike as profit at the expense of both countries. to teach them everything necessary and in-three-years plans, the House is ready for the real contest on the measure.

House Ready for Debate on Tariff Measure

The revision bill, with its sweeping reductions and lengthy free list, was reintroduced today by Mr. Underwood. It will be reported favorably by the ways to the program.

The success of the measure in the House is assured at the outset, according to the Democratic supporters of the The party majority of more than 140 is enough to carry the tariff program through, it is claimed, without likelihood

From the time the measure comes back to the House this week tariff debate is expected to go on at both ends arrangements, and by Mrs. W. M. Elli-preparations that are being made for of the Capitol.

For at least two weeks the bill probably will rest in the House while general debate is indulged in. At the end of that time the measure will be brought forward for detailed reading with the opportunity of amendment. The Republicans are preparing now to attack many of the Democratic reductions and to attempt to restore some of the protective rates which the Democrats have abandoned or severely modified.

The Democratic leaders have made the point! that deliberation at the present time is in the interest of speed and harmony later on. If Democrats opposing certain parts of the bill are per-mitted now to air their objections and sure a vote in caucus it is held that they will be less likely to bolt later on en the bill comes up for a vote on

BOX PLAITED SUMMER BLOUSE

With or without chemisette and undersleeves

THE fancy blouse that is closed at the front is one which makes an important feature of the spring and summer styles. This one is eminently chic and so simple that the veriest amateur can make it without difficulty. The sleeves are cut in one with the side portions, and these side portions are joined to the center portions beneath the plaits. The over-lapped edges of the sleeves are pretty and

When the nader sleeves are used they are arranged under the sleeves proper and stitched into place, and the chemisette is separate and closed at the back. Such a blouse can be utilized for the gown and for the odd waist with equal propriety and success. For the latter use, it seems especially well adapted to crepe de chine, messaline and the like, and to the cotton voiles and crepes that make such an important feature of prevailing styles.

HEMSTITCHING BY MACHINE

HAVE you ever tried hem-stitching by machine? It is very effective, says the Pictorial Review. You cut across the goods where the hemstitching is to appear, then lay the two edges together as if sewing a seam, but place a strip of blotting paper in between the edges. Loosen the tension of the machine and stitch through the edges and the paper. When stitched remove the paper by cutting it and pulling it out. The edges are then turned back from the hemstitching and stitched flat by machine after the tension has again been regulated. The stitching between the edges caused by loose tension of the threads gives the appearance of hemstitching. This may be done right above a regular hem that has been basted in, the cut edge nearest the hem being turned in under the hem and stitched with it. Try this, and see how well it works.

music festival, which has grown to be one of the big national music events in the class with Worcester and Cincinnati festivals. The festival is held each year with famous artists and a chorus of a thousand voices recruited from choral organizations all over the state. Nordica, Schumann-Heink, Gadski, Sembrich, Farrar. Homer and Blauvelt, are among the prima-donnas who have sung at the festivals, and there have been equally famous men singers and many soloists, men and women, of lesser fame.

The director of the festival is William R. Chapman, widely known as the conductor of the Rubenstein Club of New York.

Still another musical institution of Bangor is the second regiment band, N. G. S. M., which has for its director a promising young musician, Adelbert Wells Sprague, who, following his graduation from the University of Maine, received a degree from Harvard University for work in music. The band gives a monthly concert from October to May and is engaged each summer by the city for a series of open-air concerts in the parks. The band's programs are decidedly superior to the average band concert program, which is another indication

Mme. Nordica Sings in Boston

Students to Play Ibsen

Bringing California to Boston in floral decorative study of the platform of Symphony hall, Mme. Lillian Nordica, the soprano, presented an original program of vocal music to the applause of a large audience on Sunday afternoon. With the stage transformed by trees and flowering plants into a formal garden, the singer and her associate artists appeared in a far brighter setting than is customary in professional concerts. The architecture of the familiar stage was not obscured by the finely proportioned semicircular terrace thus formed, but was in a manner of surprise revealed.

The selections called for the accompaniment of trumpet, violin and 'cello, and so the occasion had a more potent persuasion for the ear as well as more

Some of the persons most actively in terested in these preliminary performances of promising plays are: Miss Florence Lincoln, author of the first Craig prize play, "The End of the Bridge"; J. F. Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch, who with Miss Fola La Follette, spoke at the Woman's Political Union, 46 East Twenty-ninth street, Sunday, made this announcement. The hats must not cost more than 42 cents. The first prize will be a sketch of the winner by a prominent artist, the second will be a solid silver suffrage badge and the third a complete suffrage uniform.

MORO REVOLT ENDS

WASHINGTON - Conflict with the Moros, the Philippine tribesmen which threatened the peace of the war department for several weeks, has been averted. Reports to the department says the army of tribesmen, numbering 3000, which practically laid siege to Jolo has dispersed, and that only a few Moros have refused to be reconciled. The American commanders made preparations for campaign against them, but through the Sultan of Jolo and Dato Manda, one of the powerful Moro chiefs, the rebels were

It is claimed that business conditions in Denver have been seriously injured by vicious journalism. Blackmail and the fear of blackmail have intimidated capital and crippled prosperous enterprises. For years the newspapers of Denver have printed, apparently without restraint, grossly immoral news stories. The immorality of the newspapers has not been confined exclusively to the news columns, it has permeated the advertising columns as well. Repeated instances of fakes and exaggerations are pointed out without regard to any moral or industrial responsibility, until the people have organized, and are attempting to compel their local papers to so conduct themselves as to justify the father of a family in taking a paper home for his wife and children to read. In almost every city there have been complaints against the manner in which newspapers have been conducted, but in no city of which we have any information have the leading citizens banded themselves together in an effort to correct a manifest evil. Germany Told of Arms Traffic •

Belgian Strike Crisis Felt

Against Big Arms Companies Is Regarded by the House as "Eminently Unsatisfactory"

OFFICIALS ARRESTED

Special Cable to the Monitor from its European Bureau

LONDON-When the Socialist, Dr. Liebknecht, amidst breathless attention in the Reichstag, described the armament scandal as worse than Panama, he struck a terrific blow at the whole circle of armor barons.

"I am not merely making assertions," he said. "I hold the proofs."

What the Vorwaerts had indicated previously in its columns he pressed home in the Reichstag. First the international nature of the armor circle was shown by the fact that orders for steel plate had been given to a firm financed with French capital; second, that one great arms company had provided funds for anti-German agitation in the French chauvinist press with a view to keeping up the demand for increased armaments; third, overtures to the Emperor Napoleon to supply him with guns and had actually supplied the American government with armor plate at 400 marks a ton less than the price charged to the German government, and had finally carried on a system of bribery by which officials in the Berlin war office were induced to disclose tenders of competing firms.

The reply of the war minister to this bomb was regarded by the House as eminently unsatisfactory. He declared that the accusations were highly colored, though partially true, and that on information tendered to him by Dr. Liebknecht sundry officials had been arrested and an investigation instituted, In yesterday's issue the socialistic Vorwaerts takes up the running and actually prints the text of the communication declared to have been issued to the French press. Coming at the very moment of the determination to increase German armaments, these disclosures have created an immense sensation of which much more will be heard.

EXPANSION IN GOLD SAID TO HAVE CEASED

Circulation of Currency per Capita has Remained Practically Stationary During the Last Several Years

WORLD'S PRODUCTION

NEW YORK-Reports of currency in sales to 2:30 p. m. today: circulation confirm conclusion that gold expansion has largely spent its force The increase in circulation was very rapid during 10 years after the first defeat of Mr. Bryan, rising from $21.44 per capita in 1896 to $32.32 in 1906. For another year or two it continued, but was partly concealed by the writing off of $135,000,000 in making new estimate of gold stock.

By June 30, 1908, circulation per capita was $34.72. Since, it has remained practically stationary. The following gives a birdseye view of money in circulation, monetary stock in gold (including that in treasury and that in use) and circulation

While the United States has been add-48 1/2 48 1/4 ing steadily to its gold stock, the increase has barely kept pace with demand for currency caused by increase of population. Between 1900 and 1910 population increased at an average of 1,400,000 per year. If the rate is now 1,500,000 a 14% 14% year, amount of new currency required 1% 1% to maintain a circulation of $34 per capita is, roughly, $51,000,000 per annum. This almost exactly corresponds with the increase in money in circulation shown by above figures for nearly five years since June, 1908, when circulation first exceeded $34 per capita.

World's production of gold has been running during recent years $450,000,000 to $470,000,000 per year. With probably not less than $120,000,000 absorbed in the arts and approximately $100,000,000 to India, there remains over $200,000,000 added annually to gold monetary stock of civilized countries. The United States Wab P T 4s ctfs...... 1812 has averaged about $50.000,000, or nearly West Shore 4s r one quarter, leaving the rest for Ger- Western Electric 5s 1011/2 8/1/2 87 1/2 | many, France, Russia, Austria, Brazil, Westinghouse ev....... 9234

Argentine republic etc. If circulation per capita in this country 100% 100% 100% has been substantially stationary for five years, the question arises why increase in commodity prices has continued. The answer, so far as it depends on monethe fact that stimulus to production and extension of industrial equipment during the rapid monetary expansion tended for a time to continue from its own momentum, and is at last being checked only by the fact that expansion of credit has reached the limit of gold reserves and cannot go further without invoking a repetition of the monetary stringency recently felt so acutely all over the world.

Socrates as a Moralist

In the "Protagoras" Plato shows Socrates asking the Sophist, his wordy antagonist, leading questions as to the unity of moral qualities. He says, "Are wisdom, and temperance, and courage. and justice, and holiness, five names of the same thing? or has each of the names a separate underlying essence no one of them being like any other one of them?" Protagoras thinks that the five names have each a separate object and that all of them are parts of virtue, but not in the same way that the parts of gold are like each other. Under fire of the Socratic questioning. Protagoras soon tries to qualify his statement a little, saying that four out of the five qualities are to some extent similar and that the fifth, which is courage, is very different from the other four. For, he says, many men are utterly unrighteous and ignorant who are nevertheless remarkable for their courage.

Socrates then proceeds to show, however, that the courage of ignorance is not true courage at all. He only is truly conrageous who is wise, who understands all things concerned in the affair wherein he is supposed to show courage. He ays, "The wisest are also the most conident, and being the most confident are bravest, and upon that view again fom will be courage." It is not courto brave a danger of which one is

Some Sun Flower Names

It is an interesting fact of flower nomenclature that the splendid Greek word for sun, helios, is given to such diverse members of the familiar garden phalauxes as the big jolly sunflower and the exquisite heliotrope. The latter name means turning to the sun, from a habit of the flowers not often observed. The other of course means merely sunflower, though this flower is also supposed to follow the sun around the horizon, and even to turn its face waiting for the rising after it has bidden the sun good night at the west. Helianthemum is one of the charmingly named rock-rose family, the frostweed, which opens only when the sun shines. The helichrysum is a garden variety of immortelles, of a bright gold color which explains the name.

avoided society as much as I could decorously, for I received more pleasure in the cultivation and improvement of my own thoughts than in walking up and down among the thoughts of others. hour of every day and put into practise stubborn and slow to yield, but courage on the street, at the bench, at the desk, combined with persistence will win in in public transact ons or in the private every case. Moral courage helps us to be patient in adversity, gentle under persecution; it leads us to the point where we shall be ever ready to forgive an injury and even to bless our persecutor. Truly saith the Scripture, "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city." Unselfed courage has marked the course of every noble life. It is illustrated in the life of Jesus who came "to give his life a ransom for many." It found expression in the boldness of Peter and Paul who withstood to the face even kings and rulers in contending for Truth. All through the ages there have been living witnesses to moral courage and in this day it has been exemplified in wonderful degree in the life of Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, who ever stood by her convictions unflinchingly amid adversity and persecution, all because she wished to bring to the world a more practical understanding of God.

Chicago and Civic Music

CHICAGO is a great convention city, and it is a common belief that Chicago views the convention wholly in a commercial light—that it means to her so many carloads or so many trainloads of visitors, so many hotel guests, so much in per capita expenditure—and nothing more. Such a belief does injustice to Chicago. That city would be neither the progressive nor the prosperous community she is if she proceeded about the handling of conventions or any other important matters on such coldly material and narrow lines. There can be no gainsaying that Chicago has a sharp eye for business, but she also has a sharp eye for the things that make for the solid foundation of her communal life. There is never a great gathering in Chicago from which some permanent good is not extracted by its leading and thoughtful citizens. The gathering, whether it be associated with an exposition or a national political convention, reveals the need at home of something that is lacking, and steps are at once taken to supply it. No great city in the world is more conscious of her shortcomings, her deficiencies, than Chicago. No great city in the world is struggling more earnestly and persistently to overcome them.

This week Chicago is entertaining the National Federation of Musical Clubs. Delegates representing over 400 organizations, with a membership of 45,000, are present. This gathering manifests itself as a festival, the eighth in the history of the federation. It is an event in music. It might easily come and go, however, leaving little save pleasant memories behind. But Chicago is taking advantage of its presence to organize a Civic Musical Association, something she has long needed, something that is needed in every considerable town and city in the country.

Civic music is too often left to those who are without the requisite qualifications. It becomes mixed with ordinary municipal affairs. It even becomes involved in local politics. Great sums of money are being expended in these days to promote popular musical taste and culture in communities. There is little or no organization. Private energy, and frequently political influence, have much to do with the expenditures. Reform is necessary. Its necessity has been felt in Chicago. Before the present week passes Chicago, in all probability, will have organized a local Civic Musical Association, and there is likelihood that this will be the beginning of a movement that will spread throughout the nation. The movement is reported to be of large municipal significance. It is this and more. If it shall be carried out to the extent of its possibilities, it will give tone and character to the musical taste of the mass of the American people domiciled in towns and cities. One culture inevitably leads to another, and an improvement in popular musical taste should influence for the better popular leanings, longings and aspirations in general.

A Place for Expert Control THERE are few posts at Washington needing expert supervision as much as the census bureau does. Gathering, compiling, publishing and interpreting statistics of the nation is not a task that Congress is able to outline save in its direct, broader features. So from the days of the first incumbent, down to the present director of the decennial numbering of the people, Presidents have won or failed in exercise of discretionary power according as they have selected men competent for the task and as they have backed their nominees in efforts to balk spoilsmen of both parties who scruple not to impair the service by loading it with inefficient enumerators.

The nation had reason to suppose that President Wilson would incline to select for the place a man with some knowledge of the problem of collection and use of statistics and their precise place as data on which generalizations can be based by lawmakers and by social reformers. He has named a man with a good record of administrative ability as a captain of industry, but no knowledge of censustaking. Of course the new appointee, if confirmed by the Senate, will not presume to change substantially any detail of the 1910 census publicity scheme; and long before the next census is shaped he may be out of office. The post is one that the present incumbent, Mr. Durand, is competent to fill as long as he cares to; and if he does not care to retain the place, his successor should be a man of the same type and have had the same sort of schooling for the place.

Bringing Alfalfa Farther East

ALFALFA had been cultivated in the far West and Southwest for many years before any attempt was made to introduce it into the middle western states. A great drought in southern Nebraska and northern Kansas about ten years ago destroyed all the fodder in those sections, and this led in the following season to the planting of wide areas of the hardy alfalfa. Since then the area of cultivation has been spreading annually. It thrives, on becoming acclimated, where other fodder crops fail. It has been planted with almost equal success in the dry and wet lands. It is adapted to irrigation and resistant to drought. Transmissouri farmers have not ceased to wonder even yet how they ever managed to get on without it. Kansas alone has about 1,000,000 acres in alfalfa, and surrounding states have increased its cultivation relatively.

Experiment stations have been engaged in the work of introducing alfalfa into the different states for several years. It has been grown in New York and New Jersey and in the New England states to some extent. Alfalfa hay and alfalfa meal are now regular, practically staple, articles of commerce. Notwithstanding, the cultivation of the grass has been neither as widespread nor as extensive as might have been expected, and the information contained in the Monitor regarding renewed interest in its cultivation in the middle West comes as welcome intelligence to those who have seen some of the benefits that have followed its introduction beyond the Missouri.

It is said that about $1,000,000 is at the disposal of different organizations in the middle western states having for their purpose the promotion of alfalfa planting. These organizations are in part agricultural, in part industrial and in part commercial. The object in view is to encourage the cultivation of a crop that promises stability. The returns from it, whether it be made into feed for merchantable purposes or employed on the home farm for fodder, are large and regular. Its widespread cultivation is taken by business and money interests in the nature of an assurance of the solvency of the countryside. It is one of the most dependable of crops.

Our article on the subject told interestingly of the manner in which the organizations are working to promote cultivation of alfalfa on a large scale in Illinois, Michigan and Ohio. These states have been planting alfalfa to a considerable extent, Ohio having put in about 23,000 acres two years ago; but what is needed is a more general permanent system of alfalfa cropping, and this is the end toward which the energies of the different organizations are directed. If alfalfa shall take root in Ohio in the larger sense, that will be its farthest point East for the present. But it still remains to be seen what may be done throughout New England. There is a strong belief that it can be adapted to the soil of the six states in this section, and experiments are being carried on with the view of establishing that fact. In the meantime, the wider the alfalfa area in the middle West the more reason will there be to expect an increase in the meat output and a general lowering of the cost of living. For alfalfa gives freedom to many products used for feed and fodder that can be thrown into the general foodstuff supply

BALTIMORE, MD., offers a striking illustration of the force of Henry W. Longfellow's admonition, "Learn to labor and to wait." Another way of putting it would be to say that the experience of Baltimore affords the latest exemplification in a large way of the now universally recognized fact that it pays to advertise. Baltimore articles in the Monitor have told in a graphic manner how that city has been awakened in these later years to a proper sense of its advantages, and how this awakening has been followed by expansion and development without a parallel in its history. It must not be assumed, however, that there is anything accidental about this, for quite the contrary would be the truth.

Baltimore's

Civic

Baltimore four or five years ago was like a merchant who having packed his store with a stock of goods, and being desirous of selling them, forgot to take down his shutters. The crowds rushed by his closed windows without dreaming that so many good things could be found inside. Baltimore's shutters were up. Suddenly it was decided to take them down. To do this, to interest people who had become somewhat indifferent, to rehabilitate the stock, to repaint and redecorate, and put the place generally in order, and then to publish to the world that business would be resumed on a different basis; to get the newspapers of the country to talk about the change for the better, to invite excursionists, to accommodate and entertain conventions, to go in for publicity on a big scale—all this took time and cost money, and doubtless Baltimore wondered often whether it was alleworth while.

It apparently has no doubt on this subject now. When the real change set in it set in very quickly and on a great scale. Baltimore has become a better-built city, a better looking city, a better governed city in the last few years. Its trade has grown immensely. Its industries have increased. It possesses a higher civic spirit. It is apparently on the direct road to the greatness its earlier inhabitants were so certain was in store for it. There is a stronger desire on every side to make it a pleasant home as well as a busy commercial community.

Baltimore is fulfilling the promises made for it by a disinterested and generous American press on the strength of the splendid work done by its publicity department. And now that Baltimore is doing finely in every particular it should not forget the forces that entered into the doing of it; the forces with which it was wont at times to become impatient, nor should it by any means overlook any possibility of testifying to the fact that it pays to advertise.

The Woman Police Officer Logic of the demand that woman shall have something to say about making the laws also calls for her employment in enforcing the same, especially as laws have to do with women's welfare. States or cities that have authorized women to administer laws in connection with popular education have led the way, and with results that no critic can successfully challenge. Philadelphia, under its reform administration, is doing many things that take it out of the class of conservative communities and that give the lie to the old saying about its combined corruption and contentment. One of its innovations, modeled on the success of the experiment in Los Angeles, has been enlistment of two women on the police force, to do for women, either under arrest or in peril of it, those things which common sense tells any candid person can better be done by a woman than by a man.

What Philadelphia has done other eastern cities will probably do in due time. Urban life in its relation to woman's existence as a renter of lodgings, earner of her own living, user of the streets, and frequenter of places of recreation, is forcing new ideals of policing. The testimony of trained women who have made a study of social problems is mounting up in its demand for more recognition of women officials in settlement of issues of justice where woman stands at the bar charged with lawlessness. This demand cannot be treated with contempt. It comes from persons whose unselfishness and patriotism is equal to their exact information as to social conditions in urban centers and as to how they influence girls and women. A city that truly reverences its womanhood and really wishes administration of law to be just will, we think, put at the service of its courts women competent to do police duty among women and for women.

It is generally conceded that proper care will eliminate much of the smokiness of cities, but it is not generally conceded that proper care is taken to eliminate it. Interest seems to center mostly in estimating how much the nuisance costs annually.

Arbor DAY is celebrated up and down the country at different dates. It does not make so much difference as to time, if trees are only planted.

BEGINNING with Venezuela in these recent years, several Latin-American republics have at one time or another become involved in disputes with European governments over the non-payment of public loans or private debts publicly guaranteed. The case of Venezuela, which threatened to become serious in President Cleveland's time, will be readily recalled, as will also that of Santo Domingo, and, later still, that of Honduras and of Cuatewala. The protection of Europe and of Cuatewala.

Reversing Latin-American Policy and of Guatemala. The protection of European creditors of certain of the Latin-American republics has long been a complicating factor in the assertion and maintenance of the Monroe doctrine. The United States, under that doctrine, has felt, on the one hand, that it could not countenance coercive methods in debt collection to the extent of permitting any European nation to invade American territory, while, on the other hand, it has been compelled to assume a moral responsibility in the premises. It could not, that is, permit the Monroe doctrine to be used as a shield for peoples or persons who would not pay their just debts.

In the course of time it became the case in certain of the republics frequently disturbed by revolutions that they were unable, even if willing, to meet their financial obligations, and then it seemed necessary for the United States to face the problem of guaranteeing the payment of the indebtedness, and providing for its own indemnification by assuming control of certain of the revenues of the insolvent country. This was the course pursued in the case of Santo Domingo. The finances of this republic had become completely demoralized. It could neither pay its debts nor obtain further foreign credit. Its creditors were clamoring for relief. If the United States government would not consent to forcible collection, it was told diplomatically, it must take the responsibility of collection upon its own shoulders. The crisis arising here seemed to justify resort to the plan of revenue control long contemplated, and an American-Dominican treaty looking to the adjustment of the debts of the republic was entered upon in the spring of 1905. Under this treaty a loan of $20,000,000 was authorized, and provision was made for a United States receivership of Dominican customs, beginning on April 1 of the year named. Since then peace has prevailed in the republic, only one disturbance of a serious nature occurring in the last eight years. The reorganization of Dominican finances has proceeded to the satisfaction of all parties concerned. Every obligation has been met. The trade of the republic has greatly increased.

It will be seen that this policy had its beginning under the Roosevelt administration. The Taft administration undertook to apply it, in the first place, to the situation in Honduras. For several years the finances of that republic had been seemingly in a hopelessly tangled condition, and foreign creditors had begun to look to the United States for relief. In January, 1911, a convention providing for the conversion of the debt was signed at Washington by Secretary Knox. Under this convention it was expected that J. P. Morgan & Co. would furnish the amount necessary to clean up the Honduran debts. This loan would be made, of course, under absolute guarantees from the United States. The Senate withheld its approval. Other attempts made to carry out the Dominican principle failed. The policy of benevolent interference in Latin-American affairs received the name

It is understood in Washington now that this policy is to be completely reversed by the Wilson administration. It seemed wise at its inception. The experience of Santo Domingo appeared to confirm this belief. It promised a way out for the Monroe doctrine. It promised to give greater stability to the weaker Latin republics. There is an intimation that the principle has been in some particulars abused. That is a matter for future attention. At present interest must necessarily center upon whatever plan the present administration shall offer as a substitute for the Latin-American policy of its immediate predecessors.

As the federation of widely distributed organizations bearing different names but all working for the elevation of the stage becomes older it also becomes more constructive in purpose and inclusive in its membership. Comparison of the program of the first convention of the Drama League of America with the scheduled addresses and discussions of the third conference opening in Chicago this week will prove this to any skeptic. During the interval friendly relations between managers, players, playwrights, playgoers and affluent patrons and patronesses of the theater have been established and fixed. Terms of amity between the reputable playhouse, the home and the school have been defined, and also given practical effect in many instances. A considerable body of literature, educational in its purpose and serviceable as a guide to a variety of folk seeking light on the technique and ethics of the drama, has been specially prepared and sent broadcast. Pecuniary aid of a tangible sort has been given to various enterprises, differing in kind but all making for untrammeled and decommercialized play production.

Delegates to this coming conference will assemble, consequently, with a sense of achievement such as few of the pioneers in the movement dared to hope for when the decision was made to give national scope to a plan that had worked well in and about Chicago. If jubilation is heard it will not be the only note. Much remains to be done, and the delegates will find awaiting them a program of business that will indicate the promoters' intention that certain problems inherent in the federation scheme shall have partial if not complete solution, and that the conference shall have its educational as well as social and administrative values.

Not the least interesting detail of the program of the conference will be the share that historians of literary development and critics of contemporary plays, men holding academic posts and engaged mainly in objective appraisal of craftsmanship, are to have in debate with actors and playgoers. The profit of such a clashing must be mutual.

There are persons who, with some show of reason be it said, claim that no more radical and significant event in the history of American education during the past decade or two can be cited than the altered attitude of the colleges and universities toward plays, playwrights and players. As the change has been registered at both state and privately-endowed institutions the ultimate net effect upon the cultural standards of the nation must be marked.

THE despatches have it that a woman has been elected police magistrate, clerk, auditor and treasurer of a Colorado city. A man was elected mayor. Why this discrimination?
